Calling A Big Bluff

The Nazi claims of invincibility are pure and unadorned bluff, despite what has happened to Poland, Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Belgium and France. These countries were already defeated before a single Nazi soldier had ever fired a shot, let alone a machine gun, and children or before a single trooper goose-stepped upon their territory.

The repudiation of those claims can be attributed largely to the clever use of military weapons known as " Fifth column " and its activities, designed to pave the way for subsequent military occupation. This weapon is a two-edged sword and is all the more dangerous because it is concealed until the victim has been stabbed in the back. If its priming is revealed in time and the character of the people who employ it is understood, the weapon might be captured and destroyed. The Fifth column is the Fifth column activity, as conducted under the leadership of Hitler and Goebbels is actually termed a two-edged sword. Its purpose is to convince those who might be captured and destroyed. The Fifth column is the Fifth column activity, as conducted under the leadership of Hitler and Goebbels is actually termed a two-edged sword. Its purpose is to convince those who might be captured and destroyed.

Now this is a very infectious weapon to employ, if the victims among whom it is used are apathetic or ideologically incompetent. If, however, they are on the alert to recognize it whenever and wherever it may be used, and they are not to be misled by it, it is immediately rendered its lethal power. Unfortunately, the nations to which reference has been made, did not recognize it for what it was, nor did they endeavor to thwart it, until its deadly poison had taken root and rendered them as easy prey for the final and openly military thrust.

The "Secret Dagger"

The deadly nature of this "secret" weapon is well exposed in an article written by an author known as "The Secret Dagger." The author, who is the author of the book "The Secret Dagger," is a member of the Canadian Legion of the British Empire. The author, who is the author of the book "The Secret Dagger," is a member of the Canadian Legion of the British Empire. The author, who is the author of the book "The Secret Dagger," is a member of the Canadian Legion of the British Empire.

These deadly young units finished off whatever morale was left among the German population. It was the campaign completed. This was the last of the German population. It was the campaign completed. This was the last of the German population. It was the campaign completed. This was the last of the German population.

As for the alleged "invincibility of German might," Runymede soon completely explodes the legend which the Nazis themselves have been using to build up and reveal it for the world which it really is. He does this, by showing that the German might is not invincible, but is a myth. He does this, by showing that the German might is not invincible, but is a myth. He does this, by showing that the German might is not invincible, but is a myth.

By the air, he says. "The morale of our own young fighters is better. By the air, he says. "The morale of our own young fighters is better. By the air, he says. "The morale of our own young fighters is better. By the air, he says. "The morale of our own young fighters is better."

As for the much-touted German army Runymede cites its failure to prevail in the British in that immortal withdrawal to Dunkerque when the British expeditionary force ought to have been destroyed. It was not because they fought back. From this illustration of the "night of the long knives," Runymede concludes that "The Nazis are humiliated, and their morale is broken. They are beaten, and their morale is broken. They are beaten, and their morale is broken. They are beaten, and their morale is broken."

The whole objective of Runymede's able article is to point out that the work of undermining the confidence and morale of the civilian population in Germany is underway, and that of the people of this country are not to be defeated if it is essential that they keep their courage so high as that of the fighting troops.

"You don't," says Runymede, "believe in the breed which has been used by the Nazis to make the war. You don't believe in the breed which has been used by the Nazis to make the war. You don't believe in the breed which has been used by the Nazis to make the war."

Canadian Troops Take Icelandic With Aid Of Bombs

Canadian troops are winning the good will of Icelanders, whose island they have gained against a long and bitter struggle, according to Arni Ragnarsen, a Canadian who passed through the island on route home after a visit to his native Iceland.

Relations between the troops and Icelanders has been facilitated by the fact that the "Islands" for soldiers, brought to the island by the Canadian Legion. Ragnarsen also said German "bombers" had been making raids on the island for several years, but he was doubtful if they recently that the expeditions were sent from the German war office.

French Vice-Chancellor

Pierre Laval Is Thoroughly Defeated By Many People

The place being made in Paris to "try" former Premier Daladier and Chamberlain, the members of his cabinet are being taken to France into war against the Nazis, are of a sort which is entirely a political and not a military one.

Laval, reported to be believed by both Hitler and Mussolini, is now in prison. He is now in prison. He is now in prison. He is now in prison.

New Trade Horizons

Ancient Bazaar May Become Near East Door For Britain

New trade horizons opening in the Near East as a result of the Middle East war, are likely to be of great importance to the British Empire.

A Turkish transport expert has gone to Basra, at the head of the Gulf of Persia, to investigate possibilities of using it as a regular point of contact with Britain.

The British, the United States and Japan, he will proceed also to India, to develop development of Turkish economic resources in that country.

It appears that for the first time since ancient days Basra may be among the real door to the Near East and British enterprise, which led to the foundation of the Basra port of Manila during the Mesopotamian campaign in the Great War, and its subsequent administration by a British port authority, will prove more justified than ever.

Three times weekly the Taurus express pulls out of Istanbul bearing its new destination label, "Baghdad." As a result of the completion of the railway line in July, it can now collect, on the two-day journey through Turkey, goods destined for all parts of the world because another railway line connects Baghdad with Basra.

The new outlet for Turkish trade is being actively sought by the British and German efforts to convince Turkish business men that their true interests lie in the eastern bazaar of Central Europe.

The Germans are dismayed because Turkey sends them only about 10 per cent of her exports, compared with the 52 per cent going to Basra, but the Anglo-Turkish railway pact was signed last year.
